

Kittens and Cats

FVRCP=Feline Viral Rhinotracheitis, Calicivirus, Panleukopenia

Feline Respiratory Diseases (Calicivirus, Rhinotracheitis) are highly contagious and widespread. These diseases are easily spread from cat to cat by sneezing, etc. Even a cat that seems healthy can infect your cat. Chances are high that your cat will be exposed. Calicivirus can be fatal to cats.

Feline Panleukopenia, also known as feline distemper, is highly contagious and can be fatal. Nine out of ten cats with distemper may die. Since this disease is easily transmitted from cat to cat, chances are very high that your cat will be exposed. Symptoms include depression, loss of appetite, vomiting and diarrhea.

Feline Leukemia is now considered the leading cause of cat deaths. FeLV breaks down the cat's ability to fight off infections of any sort. The cat usually dies of a disease that it would normally be able to resist. Effective FeLV vaccines are available to protect uninfected cats.

Feline Heartworms. Cats get heartworm disease in the same way dogs do. Mosquitoes transmit the disease by biting an already infected animal, and then pass the infection on to other animals. Often, cat owners assume their indoor cat is safe. That is not true. Both indoor and outdoor cats are susceptible to this disease. Just one worm can cause coughing, breathing difficulties, vomiting, weight loss, and sometimes sudden death.

Feline Bordetella is the same respiratory disease (kennel cough) that infects dogs. Your cat can contract Bordetella even if it never leaves the home. Your dog, although vaccinated, can carry the disease from the kennel/grooming facility to your home.

Rabies is a fatal infection of the nervous system that attacks all warm-blooded animals including humans. It is a public health hazard and a risk to all pet owners. There is no cure for Rabies. Vaccination is your pet's only protection.

Intestinal Parasites threaten your pet's health. In large numbers, they can cause intestinal blockages, bloody diarrhea and even premature death. Microscopic examinations of your pet's stool should be done yearly for early detection and treatment. Some intestinal parasites can be transmitted to humans.

Spaying (female) or Neutering (male) is recommended for all pets that are not intended for breeding or showing. In addition to preventing pregnancy, spay/neuter surgery may significantly reduce the possibility of breast tumors, testicular disease, cancer and certain undesirable behaviors (aggression, wandering, etc.). While spay/neuter surgery is recommended when your pet is about six months old, it can usually be done at any age.

Fleas can cause anemia and even death in young pets. If swallowed, fleas can transmit tapeworms to your pet. Flea bites can cause allergic reactions resulting in a painful, itchy skin disease. Your veterinarian is best qualified to prescribe the proper products for you to eliminate these parasites.

Why Vaccinate?

Many serious pet diseases can be prevented by vaccination. Even if kept indoors, your pet can be exposed to viruses carried in the air, on clothing, or by insects that come inside the house. Vaccination is inexpensive protection against costly treatment or premature death of your pet. Annual immunization boosters are needed to continue protection.
